* Great prudence and foresight was manifested by our ancestor William³, the leader of the Colony or settlement, in securing to his own family the water privileges within his jurisdiction. On the Dennis Stream he, with his son Tristram³, took the control, while on the Gallup and Lilly Brooks, where they fell into tide water and where there were best privileges for mill and machinery, his son Robert held dominion. From the meagre accounts we have of him he seems to have been a man of purpose and enterprise, and doubtless if he had lived to carry on improvements which must have been suggested to a man of energy, a far different tale there would be now to tell of home and family.

Tristram located permanently at the Mills, which is far and away the most beautiful location in all the region, for whether your standpoint is on the higher grounds overlooking lake and pond, or from the old mansion door, you will say of the one that it is beautiful, and what can you say of the other?

Tristram Moore was a man of much quiet energy and business method, of great intelligence and observation, a man to meet of all others, especially in his own home. He knew his own business, and so was miller and sawyer. He held also the public honors, and so was Justice of the Peace and one of two commissioners for solemnizing marriage—Patrick Clinch of Saint George was the other—in the County of Charlotte.

Of his good wife Thankful, can I say anything good of her that is not superlatively fitting? In deed and in truth she was a helpmeet for him. In deed and in truth she was a helpmeet to the poor and needy, who never failed to receive her bounty. Their numerous children! "have they not sprung from the root of the righteous, which yieldeth fruit?" And have they not gone forth to meet the morning through the length and breadth of the land? Here passed long and useful lives, well known for the kind heart and the open hand!

† Did you ever hear of Oak Hill, or of the Buchanan homestead? They were about the same thing—interchangeable terms. Here

"In pastures deep the heifer lowed, Great fields of grain the reapers mowed."

Here lived one notable among his fellows; of rough exterior and unpolished manners, certainly; with faults, as who has not; making no pretence to that charity "that suffereth long and is kind" or any other kind of charity, but evinced a warmth of heart and kindness of disposition seldom met with among us, as witness how many waifs who met bed and board until they were waifs no longer, but suited to take their place as men and women among their fellows ; as witness the outer door and the latch-string, the great fire-place with its great back-logs,—which for more than fifty years admitted the cold and hungry, at any hour of the twenty-four. But not to multiply witnesses.

He was also great in the parish. What he said went, as when David Mc——, a bulldog of the treasury, said of the town that "we wouldn't have no 'sessment this year," and was asked why. "Why, Mr. Buchanan says so." "But why does he say so?" "Because we got overplush enough."

But 'tis all gone. James Buchanan succeeded James Buchanan, till the last met misfortune in long, acute rheumatism, at length to succumb. The last James Buchanan has neither the nerve nor the muscle to take his place in line, and so the whole suffers, farm and buildings go to decay, and he is only suffering scant comfort or no comfort at all, where before was plenty and to spare!
